IRP LESSON TASK 1: COLLOCATIONS

Below you will find details and the format of Lesson Task 1, which you will complete in the second hour on Friday, Week 2.

Activity 1 is given here for you to review before the class.

Activities 2 and 3 will be completed offline in class. Please do not submit this document – it is only intended as guidance.

Task Overview

This lesson task is designed to evaluate/review your knowledge of collocations while developing your academic writing skills. Accurate use of collocations improves fluency, coherence, and credibility in academic writing.

Your work will be assessed on accuracy, appropriateness, clarity and grammatical correctness.

This is an in-class task. If you are absent, you will not be able to complete or submit the task at another time. All activities in the booklet will be compulsory.

Writing and Submission Guidelines

You may use:

- An offline monolingual English dictionary
- An offline collocations dictionary (paper or digital without internet access)

You may not:

- Use online sources or Wi-Fi
- Use AI tools or software (e.g., ChatGPT, Grammarly)
- Use your mobile phone
- Include citations

- Upload your completed task to Moodle before the end of the class.

CHOOSING THE CORRECT COLLOCATION IN CONTEXT

1. Read the text below and choose the most appropriate word in each pair to complete the collocations in bold:

Noah Webster's American Dictionary of the English Language

The dictionary compiled/formed by Noah Webster (1758–1843) in the years after American independence is a prime example of the shaping/making of a distinct cultural identity for political means. One of Webster's ambitions was to give his newly/freshly independent nation a language of its own. In the early/starting stages of its development, Webster was planning to call his project a Dictionary of the American Language, and he wrote of American and English as being distinct languages. (Finegan, 2006, p. 392). By the time he came to publish in 1828, however, he had settled on the less radical title of An American Dictionary of the English Language. Yet a key/grave aim of his was still to use the dictionary as a means of distinguishing between the English that was used in Britain and that used in America. He did this primarily through attempts to reform/repair the spelling system so that American English looked markedly/highly different from British English. Webster's motivations were highly/considerably political and based on his belief that 'a national language is a band of national union' (Webster, 1991 [1789], p. 87).
